Dogs, Too, Soon Will Be Freed From B. O. Worry

NEW YORK—The personal dainti-ness for which humans now spend $54 million annually in buying de-odorants, is to be extended to beasts.

Dogs, too, can now enjoy that freedom from "what your best friend won't tell you" by eating new de-odorant canned dog foods which are guaranteed to take away B.O. and halitosis. These went on sale in Pacific Coast states around mid-November and, soon will be available nationally. The sweetness that chlorophyll tablets brought to the breath and body of human beings, a chlorophyll derivative called chlor-ophyllin brings to dogs.

It was New York veterinarian Dr. Maurice Serling, of Serling Laboratories, Inc., who decided to try the benefits of chlorophyll to the canine species. He fed tablets experimentally to dogs of various breeds and sizes having assorted breath and body odors, with such encouraging results that research into chlorophyl-lin was the logical next step.

Nine months' exhaustive tests followed in which dog foods with chlor-ophyllin added were fed to a cross-section of dogs of every type, age and size who were suffering from offensive odors of every kind, rang-ing from "fishy" mouth odors to pungent body smell. Serling found chlorophyllin acted as a neutralizer for malodorous substances and, in proper dosages, apparently does not affect normal digestive activities.

During the chlorophyll phase of his research, Dr. Serling found that some odors take longer to eliminate than others. It took 6 to 12 hours longer to eliminate body odors than mouth odors, for instance. He also found that many odors arose from unknown causes or from very mild skin irritations. Several dogs having eczema, for example, were bathed, getting transient relief from the characteristic odor but it came back the next day. When tablets were administered, however, the odor cleared and recurred only when medication was discontinued. Dur-ing the study, a particularly warm day brought a doggy smell to the wards of the veterinary hospital where the animals were kept. One chlorophyll tablet mixed in each dog's food eliminated the odor from the wards in about 12 hours.

Request for Booklet Cause for Speculation

STORMVILLE, N. Y.—A New York state citizen here who merely wanted to improve his living conditions stirred the lo-cal police into feverish activity.

His request, mailed to the Minneapolis-Honeywell Regula-tor Company for its booklet "How to Modernize for Com-fort," was relayed to authori-ties here.

Why? The ambitious New Yorker is Inmate No. 219, in Greenhaven Prison here.

Marine Pilot Gets Four Tanks with Single Bomb

WITH THE FIRST MARINE AIRCRAFT WING IN KOREA—The infantry has confirmed that Marine First Lieutenant James McCleery destroyed four enemy tanks with one napalm bomb. He had to. It was the only weapon he had left.

Lieutenant McCleery of St. Louis, Mo., and his wingmate from the Marine "Deadcat" squadron, First Lieutenant Loren W. Calhoun of Ashton, Ill., were near the end of an armed search over North Ko-rea when they spotted the Commu-nist tanks.

The Marines had used up all their bombs, rockets and machine gun ammunition. They carried one napalm fire bomb as their only weapon.

Flying extremely low, Lieutenant McCleery discovered the four cleverly camouflaged tanks pro-truding from a natural revetment under an overhanging hill.

This was a larger order than he had figured on, but he decided to make the napalm bomb do as much damage as possible. He set his Corsair fighter-bomber into a dive and released the napalm tank. It landed right in the middle of the target and splattered its fire over the four tanks.

When the pilot left the area, all the tanks were burning.

Two days later, an infantry unit moved north through the area and sent word back that all four tanks were burned out and destroyed.

Boy Tries to Rob Store, Way It's Done 'On Radio'

PORTLAND, Ore.—A ten-year-old boy, failing in the attempt to rob a grocery store, said that he got the idea from radio.

"You hear these guys on the radio pulling these jobs and it seems real easy. I just wanted to see if it was."

Police said that the grocer, John E. Myers, handed the boy the money he demanded, then wrestled the gun away from him. He gave this story:

The boy, masked behind a red bandana, entered the store with a .38 calibre revolver and said, "This is a holdup. Put the money in a sack or I'll shoot."

Myers said he handed the money with his left and grabbed at the gun with his right hand.

"He put up quite a battle," Myers told police.

Hold Model Gen. Assembly

On the 18th and 19th of April the Model General Assembly will convene in Richmond. Boys and girls from all over the state will partici-pate in this activity sponsored by the YMCA.

The Model General Assembly is a replica of the Virginia General Assembly. It is operated by High School students who follow the re-gular methods and procedures used by the real General Assembly. The Youth Governor and other officials are elected, and preside as do the regular officials. Bills are drafted by the different Hi-Y and Tri-Hi-Y clubs and are printed in bill books. These bills are studied by com-mittees and go through the regular procedure before they become laws.

Each high school club affiliated with the YMCA is allowed to send two legislators, a reporter, and pages. The legislators may go to the House or Senate. There they introduce their bills and support them. They also serve on some committee. The reporter brings back to his or her school or town news-paper the events that took place in the assembly. The pages are to help expedite the workings of the session.

To help the young people in car-rying out the procedure of the Gen-eral Assembly in the correct way will be Virginia legislators, Com-monwealth officials and Commons-youth employees.

From Appomattox High School there are four representatives to the Assembly. From the Senior Tri-Hi-Y, Ann Good and Cecil Hillman will be the legislators, Peggy Cole will be the reporter, Fred Carr, a member of the Hi-Y, will also go as a legislator. He is being sponsored by The Times-Virginian.

This group, and a sponsor, Mrs. Louise Brown, will leave for Rich-mond early Friday morning. The girls will stay at the Hotel Rich-mond and the boys at the King Carter Hotel.

The first session of the Assembly begins at 10:30 Friday morning. The final session ends at 4:00 Sat-urday afternoon. During that time our representatives will be busy trying to get their bill passed. That bill asks for two years of free junior college extended to certain stu-dents. The legislators from Appo-mattox will make speeches support-ing the bill and will try to get other representatives to vote for it.

Outlawed African Snails Threaten South and West

Achatina fulica is the giant African land snail with the big ap-petite and a globe-trotting urge. Sometimes as large as a baseball, it has raised hob with vegetation on Guam, the Marianas, and other Pacific islands in recent years. It is trying to get a foothold in the United States.

This ravenous mollusk has caused apprehension by invading flower and by briefly holding small hoodlu-heads at not one but several United States ports on both east and west coasts.

A new law passed by Congress will prohibit Achatina's further im-portation. Federal and state plant quarantine inspectors have had to rely on voluntary cooperation of ship crews to hold the dreaded pest at bay. Now they can search car-goes coming from snail-infested areas, even to travelers and their baggage. They can inspect, detect and destroy.

The law will not end Achatina's grave threat to American crops, however. Federal pest control au-thorities say. The snail prefers tropical and sub-tropical climes and, if given a chance, the slimy stranger probably would chew up merrily on the vegetation of the west coast, the south, and south-east, while avoiding northern areas where winters are fairly cold.

Satellites

Counting our own Moon, there are 30 known satellites of the nine known planets. Jupiter has the most, with 11, and Saturn is second with nine. Uranus has five and Mars and Neptune each two. Mer-cury, Venus and Pluto have none, as far as we know. Two of Jupi-ter's satellites are each about 3,200 miles in diameter; bigger than our Moon, even larger than Mercury. The outermost satellite of Mars (named Deimos) is prob-ably the smallest, with an esti-mated diameter of about five miles.

Bacteria Studies May Lead To Improved Food Processing

The spore "secis" of bacteria, and protein needs of insects, are being studied at the University of Illinois as a part of nationwide re-search in agriculture and human nutrition. Twenty-nine grants-in-aid to 22 universities and other institu-tions by Swift and Co. total $140,000. Those to the two projects at Illinois total $20,200.

Prof. H. Orin Halverson, bacteri-ology department head, is studying bacterial spores. Spore-producing microorganisms are responsible for most of the spoilage in canned foods. To thoroughly kill spores re-quires high temperatures and long processing. This may impair food quality.

Better knowledge about spores may result both in improved food quality and lower processing costs. There is some evidence that the problem may be solved by blocking spore production or reproduction.

Prof. G. S. Fraenkel is studying the biological value of different proteins for certain insects. Protein needs of insects are like those of humans, and by using them as test subjects he can maintain thousands of individuals and have a rapid turnover of generations in a small space and with very little test food.
